

INVITED OUT TO A DUEL

BROKER ANDRADE READY WITH HARD
GLOVES, HARD HATS OR GUNS

Craving the Blood or the Apologies of a
Brother Member of the Produce Exchange
—The Brother Meddles on the Penni Odo.
Mr. Morris Andrade, a freight broker at 8

Beaver street, interested in the shipment of cattle to Europe, sent yesterday to Mr. E. Burlinger, a freight agent for the Monarch line of steamers at 35 Broadway, the following letter:

Sir: I paid little heed to your insulting remarks to me before you are on 'Change yesterday, for reasons best known to yourself; but now that you have come to make an appointment with you, I thereby notify you that I will in future have no personal dealings with you, but if you will appoint a second I will do likewise, and will meet your proposition on equal terms, or on no terms at all, or with revolvers, beat-and-beat weapons—the only way that gentlemen should fight. You may send your answer by messenger, or by mail. Let your second call at my office. I will then name mine, under strange preliminaries. I am answering to reply by being which of my propositions you will accept, and how many minutes you wish to wait between mine and man.

M. R. Jones received this letter at the Produce Exchange, and, after showing it to his partner, expressed the intention of laying it before the committee of the Exchange, who would then challenge the bearer of the Penck's Ode.

The affair created a sensation among the Parisians, and the quarrelers were soon back home. The quarrel referred to took place on Thursday afternoon, and grew out of a business transaction of the kind which is so common in the city of Paris. The quarrelers went back to Europe by Mr. Andrade. It is alleged that both men expressed themselves with considerable violence, and that the quarrelers' language was especially severe. It is also stated that Mr. Andrade, later in the day, said to Mr. Burleigh, "You are a very good fellow, but the satisfaction of a gentleman," Mr. Andrade said to a reporter of The Sun yesterday: "I am not a member of the Exchange, but I have now reached more important proportions. Further than this I have nothing to say. I am a gentleman, and I am not able to expulsion," said a member of the Exchange. But up to a late hour President Herriek had not been able to get any further. Mr. Burleigh is of small stature, of dark complexion, and wears a full beard. Mr. Andrade is a Spanish gentleman, of medium height, with a high forehead. Neither is experienced in business, nor has either had any experience on the field. Both are men who have been in the city of the quarrel is awaited with much interest.

Lawyer Beach and Mrs. Jaffe's Jewelry.

Burton T. Beach, a lawyer of this city, against whose warrant of arrest was issued in Brooklyn on complaint of Mrs. Mary J. Jaffe, has reached over Mrs. Jaffe's jewelry to Assistant District Attorney Shorter of Brooklyn, and Justice Wain has adjourned his examination to next Thursday. Mr. Beach defended Alfred B. Jaffe, who was accused of passing paper money in the store of Gustav Verona. Jaffe was sentenced to the penitentiary for six months.

Before the trial he was sentenced Beach obtained jewelry from his wife, for which he gave a receipt. His wife then told him to give the jewelry to her lawyer, but he claims a standing on this jewelry as an officer to get an account against Mr. Jaffe. She, however, got him imprisoned, according to the report. She then wanted the jewelry from her in order in some way to keep him out of the penitentiary. When she refused, her husband was sent to prison she demanded back her jewelry, and he refused to give it. She then obtained a warrant for his arrest. He appeared in court and promised to give up the jewelry, but she refused to accept it. The jewelry is valued at several hundred dollars.
